Leader requests invitation to cease fire accords

Leader of group in eastern Ukraine seeks inclusion in new multilateral peace talks

After two failed cease fire accords between the Ukrainian military and non-government armed forces in eastern Ukraine, leaders from several countries will meet in Paris later this month attempting to broker a new agreement.

The leader in Ukraine's Donetsk region, Alexander Zakharchenko, formally requested an invitation to the upcoming peace talks yesterday. He has not been invited to any of the previous cease fire discussions.

Citizens in the Donetsk People's Republic declared their independence from Ukraine in 2014.

The UN reports that the human rights situation has deteriorated and that abuses have been committed by all sides in the conflict. They estimate over 10,000 people have been killed and another 22,000 injured since fighting broke out in April 2014. The lack of security and intense military hostilities have contributed to a total breakdown in the rule of law.

Group 2: Terrorism treatment

After two failed cease fire accords between the Ukrainian military and non-government armed forces in eastern Ukraine, leaders from several countries will meet in Paris later this week attempting to broker a new agreement.

The leader in Ukraine’s Donetsk region, Alexander Zakharchenko, formally requested an invitation to the upcoming peace talks yesterday. He has not been invited to any of the previous cease fire discussions.

Citizens in the Donetsk People’s Republic declared their independence from Ukraine in 2014. A variety of actors in the opposition have been employing terrorist tactics throughout the conflict.

“The terrorist tactics will continue until Zakharchenko is included in the peace process. This war is causing great harm and needs to stop,” Vladislav Hrytsenko, a resident of Donetsk, told reporters.

The UN reports that the human rights situation has deteriorated and that abuses have been committed by all sides in the conflict. They estimate over 10,000 people have been killed and another 22,000 injured since fighting broke out in April 2014. The lack of security and intense military hostilities have contributed to a total breakdown in the rule of law.

Group 3: Stone throwing treatment

After two failed cease fire accords between the Ukrainian military and non-government armed forces in eastern Ukraine, leaders from several countries will meet in Paris later this week attempting to broker a new agreement.

The leader in Ukraine's Donetsk region, Alexander Zakharchenko, formally requested an invitation to the upcoming peace talks yesterday. He has not been invited to any of the previous cease fire discussions.

Citizens in the Donetsk People's Republic declared their independence from Ukraine in 2014. A variety of actors in the opposition have been throwing stones and rocks at cars, windows, and people throughout the conflict.

"The stone throwing will continue until Zakharchenko is included in the peace process. This war is causing great harm and needs to stop," Vladislav Hrytsenko, a resident of Donetsk, told reporters.

The UN reports that the human rights situation has deteriorated and that abuses have been committed by all sides in the conflict. They estimate over 10,000 people have been killed and another 22,000 injured since fighting broke out in April 2014. Hanfere requests invitation to cease fire accords

Leader of Afar group in northern Ethiopia seeks inclusion in new multilateral peace talks

After two failed cease fire accords between the Ethiopian military and non-government armed forces in northern Ethiopia, leaders from several countries will meet in Paris later this month attempting to broker a new agreement.

The leader in the Afar region, Alimirah Hanfere, formally requested an invitation to the upcoming peace talks yesterday. He has not been invited to any of the previous cease fire discussions.

Citizens in the region declared their independence from Ethiopia in 2015. A variety of actors in the opposition have been employing a series of violent attacks on government forces throughout the conflict.

“The violence against the government will continue until Hanfere is included in the peace process. This war is causing great harm and needs to stop,” Mahammad Yayyo, a resident of the region, told reporters.

The UN reports that the human rights situation has deteriorated and that abuses have been committed by all sides in the conflict. They estimate over 10,000 people have been killed and another 22,000 injured since fighting broke out in April 2015. The lack of security and intense military hostilities have contributed to a total breakdown in the rule of law.

Debrief

1. Thank you for your participation in the survey. In keeping with the integrity of this study, we ask that you do not discuss this experiment with your classmates at this time.

You read an article earlier in the survey regarding upcoming peace talks. The text was written by the researchers and is not an actual BBC news story. The content of the story was created by the researchers. The purpose of this study was to examine how different ways of describing the Afar region and its leader affect the types of views that people have.

We used some factual and some fictional information to achieve the purpose of our research and maintain the scientific integrity of the study.

The factual information: (a) there is currently an ongoing conflict in Ethiopia, where some factions in the North are attempting to break from the state and (b) the region is considered politically unstable

The fictional information: (a) there is not currently a large scale armed conflict between the Afar people and the Ethiopian government; (b) there are no peace talks scheduled for this year; (c) the name of the Afar leader and citizen interviewed were constructed by the authors.

We hope this study improves our understanding of the factors that affect public opinion. If you have any questions, comments, or concerns, feel free to contact the researchers at currenteventstudy2017@gmail.com
